Did you know?

- Of all the wild cats in North America, the bobcat has the largest range, and is also the most abundant.
- Bobcats are territorial and solitary creatures.
- Bobcats are about twice the size of the average house cat.
- Like house cats, bobcats keep their claws inside their toes when walking so their claws do not show in their footprints.
- Bobcats usually prey on smaller animals like rabbits, birds, and rodents, but they can kill prey up to eight times their own weight.
- Bobcats get their name from their short tail, which appears to be cut or “bobbed.” The average bobcat tail is six to seven inches long.
- The bobcats are the smallest of the four lynx species.
- There are 12 subspecies of bobcat.
